HOMES & GARDENS

Is crown molding out of style? Interior designers discuss this classic feature and decide if it has a place in 2025

3. It has a practical purpose too

Douglas Wright of Douglas Wright Architects believes crown molding is still in style, not just because of its aesthetics but because of the practical role it has to play too.

He adds, 'I don't believe crown molding will ever go out of style because it remains a fundamental element in construction and design. It serves both a practical and aesthetic purpose, seamlessly bridging the gap between walls and ceilings while adding character to a home.'